Join us for the latest installment of “Healthy Soils” part of a continuing series of workshops hosted by Connecticut Resource Conservation & Development (RC&D) and USDA NRCS. Planning for Soil Health workshop is going to give you the tools you need on a farm to design systems to not only conserve soil, but regenerate it into a healthy, productive system. This workshop is designed to benefit producers, partners, technical staff and interested soil health enthusiasts.

With more intense weather every single year we need our soils to hold moisture, infiltrate rain, and withstand intense weather events. How can we accomplish this? That question will be answered and discussed at this event.

Regional Soil Health Specialist, Paul Salon, is the featured speaker, to detail how to design cover crops on a wide array of farmland. Learn more about the history and goals for aerial seeding in the region from Chris Thresher of JBI Helicopters. Discussion will include managing the farmstead and soil ecology. You’ll have an opportunity for hands on exercises, designing systems for your own farm, with group discussion. It’s going to be a great event!
